FRISBIE APPEALS TO HIGHEST COURT FROM THE DEATH PENALTY

Carpenter of Fountainville Has Attorney To Argue His Case

ADMITTED THE SLAYING

Now Blames Warped Judgment Due To Harsh Treatment

By International News Service

PHILADELPHIA, May 20—The State Supreme court today had under advisement the appeal of Harold B. Frisbie, 33-year-old carpenter, of Fountainville, Bucks County, from a death sentence imposed for the admitted slaying of Edward Lee, October 14, 1940.

The supreme penalty was meted out by the Sullivan County Court of Oyer and Terminer after Frisbie had admitted shooting Lee three times and robbing the latter of his automobile near Elkland Township.

Before the appellate court, Frisbie's attorney argued that the defendant's judgment was warped by harshness and ill-treatment during his childhood. Counsel pleaded for an abatement of

FLEETWINGS WELCOMES MEN WHO KNOW TRADES

Older Men Are To Be Given A Chance To Procure Employment

NEED THEM AT ONCE

The "old" men are coming back into their own in industry—at least so far as Fleetwings, Inc., Bristol airplane manufacturers, are concerned.

Older men who have been out of their trades are welcome, says W. E. Strang, personnel director of the big plant located here.

"As a matter of fact, they've been coming back into industry for the last two years and have been well received," said Strang referring to the so-called "old men."

"I don't believe from my own experience men ever forget a trade that's once been learned thoroughly. There are many who call themselves this or that who never had thorough training and may find it hard to get in because of that."

"But a man who once masters a trade doesn't forget it any more than you forget how to swim or ride a bicycle. Naturally, you can't expect immediately he goes to work the same rate of production, and in some cases there may be new processes and techniques to be mastered. But if the skill is there this comes quickly enough."

Within the last few months, in a case

Blooming Plants Given Mothers Attending Service

NEWPORTVILLE, May 13—Mother's Day was observed in Newportville Sunday School, Sunday morning, with the Men's Fellowship taking charge. Fred Kohler was the leader. Myron Mattocks gave the opening prayer, and Raymond Perpete read the scripture. The men sang in a group for the mothers. The Rev. Henry Cunningham, Newtown, gave a brief talk. The primary children sang a song; and C. Burnley White then gave an illustrated talk to the children. Each mother present was given a blooming plant by the men. Several cradle roll mothers were present with their babies.

The Rev. Cunningham brought the message at the worship service following Sunday School.

Hess Faces Grilling

London, May 13—Whisked to a secret hide-out from the Glasgow military hospital, Deputy Nazi Party Leader Rudolf Hess today faced a grilling by two of Nazidom's arch foes, British Prime Minister Churchill and Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden.

His whereabouts kept a close military secret, Hess was removed from the hospital after being examined by a group of physicians who pronounced him sane and healthy.

This examination completed, officials took the heavily guarded prisoner, who parachuted from a German war plane to the banks of Scotland's Loch Lomond Saturday night, away for his rendezvous with the Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary.

Meanwhile some British officials began to wonder whether the bizarre arrival of Hess in Scotland and his weird surrender might prove some strangely conceived Nazi trick of deception.

They thought it might be an attempt, through Hess, to plant phony information in the hands of the British Government in a maneuver to weaken Britain's guard.

These quarters pointed out that Hess must have thought out fully what the consequences of his escape would be for his family and friends.

But other circles, elated at the prospect of holding a prisoner with presumably complete knowledge of Chancellor Hitler's war plans, grimly declared—"There are ways and means of getting the truth from anybody."

Hess Had Fixed Obsession He Could Bring About Peace

Berlin, May 13—A "fixed obsession" that by personal contact with British friends he could bring about an Anglo-German understanding was blamed today for Deputy Nazi Leader Rudolf Hess' astonishing flight to Scotland.

The official German radio gave this explanation for Hess' action in the first definite German admission that Adolf Hitler's Number 3 Nazi actually is a prisoner of war in British hands.

The broadcaster gave the impression that Hess for some time had been obsessed with the idea of swinging a single handed peace that would benefit Nazi Germany and at the same time end war in the world.

Earlier, authoritative German circles conceded that Hess' disappearance from the Reich constitutes an "extraordinary painful tragedy."

At the same time, they emphasized that his sudden departure will have no effect upon Germany's war or foreign policies or the basic structure of Nazism.

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

The tax rate for Newtown borough has been set by council at 6½ mills, the same as last year. The budget has been adopted for the 12 months period.

During a meeting of the Trumbauersville School Board last week the budget for the 1941-42 term was adopted. It calls for a total expenditure of $11,585.02. John Eck presided. Morris K. Fox was appointed to replace Philip C. Fernier, who resigned.

The chief item of expense on the budget is that of teacher's salaries, $3,780. Other items include, tuition for high school pupils, $3,900, and transportation, $400. The budget figures were based on a tax rate of 21 mills on real estate and a per capita tax of $5.

WANT GOVERNMENT TO BUILD NEW TOWN

Bucks County Defense Council Will Make This Recommendation

TO SEND IT TO CAPITAL

Bucks County Defense Council will urge the National Housing Administration at Washington to build an entire town in Bucks County to house the defense workers who will be employed in the new Brewster Aeronautical Corporation's plant at Johnsville, provided the Government will finance the water, sewer and school facilities in the proposed new town.

The recommendation was approved at a meeting of the Defense Council and it was suggested that the houses in this proposed new town be of a permanent nature and built to rent for $20 to $25 per month.

The proposed town is to be located "near the Brewster plant," according to recommendations of the defense council.

Some better type homes that will rent for $35 and upward a month, will be built by private capital in Hatboro, and Hatboro will send a recommendation.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

(Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

The One Way Out

Washington, May 12. IF the speech which the President is scheduled to make Wednesday night at the Pan-American Building in Washington is not sensational and dramatic in the extreme, it will be a terrific letdown for the recognized journalistic and radio reflectors of White House thought—to say nothing of the gossip columnists. Because, without exception, for two weeks now all of these have been steadily building it up along those lines.

—O—
THE common prediction among them is that Mr. Roosevelt will lay before the people the appalling facts of British shipping destruction by Nazi submarines, and, having made clear that if continued unchecked these sinkings will insure the collapse of the British and the triumph of Hitler, announce his decision to employ the full resources of the American Navy to end the menace and render effective the aid we are supplying. This, of course, would mean convoying, and so identical is the tone of these forecasts that it is impossible to escape the belief that there has been some sort of inside inspiration.

ONE of the bolder of the prophets insists that in addition to conveying the President will declare in favor of some sort of "union now" with the British Empire. Of course, Mr. Roosevelt may do nothing of the kind in this speech, but evidence that he has been considering action on the convoy issue is overwhelming. There is no need for an inspired "build-up" to convince anyone of that. For one thing, the step is so logical as to be practically inevitable. For another, the interferences of Secretary Knox and Secretary Stimson, read

Pages of Godey's Ladies' Book 'Reproduced' by Women

NEWTOWN, May 13—In interesting manner were some presentations of Godey's Ladies' Book reviewed at a meeting of the New Century Club on Friday afternoon, with pages of an 1870 publication being "turned" by Mrs. William Loughery, chairman of the program committee.

An enlarged copy of the magazine, edited by Sara Hale, first woman editor in the United States, added to the setting.

The page titled "Engravings" was presented by Mrs. Lucy Porter, and Mrs. David Feaster played some of the music from one of the issues. Mrs. Henry Taggart read a story.

"The Ladies' Work" section was described by Mrs. Grace Naylor, who had an interesting collection of fancy work and handwork, much of which were articles in her possession, to illustrate the use of leisure time in that period. Godey's Arm Chair, which revealed the rules of etiquette and good manners prescribed at that time, was presented in an interesting resume by Mrs. Charles Hunter.

Mrs. Loughery read a few of the editorials of this famous magazine and presented a fashion page with the following club members modeling costumes of the 1870 period: Mrs. Millard Smedley, Mrs. Alfred Burns, Mrs. William Keuderline, Mrs. Lewis Fitzgerald and Mrs. William Morlok.

COUNCIL TO SPONSOR BIG WPA PROJECT COSTING $52,000

Will Rebuild and Resurface Streets, and Construct Storm Sewers

SIDEWALKS AND CURBS

Extension of Water Mains is Also Provided For In Project

Bristol Borough Council last night authorized the proper officers of the Borough to make application for a WPA project which will provide for rebuilding and resurfacing a number of streets, laying sidewalks, curbs, storm sewers, and water mains. The Borough's share of the cost of the improvements is not to exceed $52,000.

Council also authorized the appointment of two additional policemen.

The WPA project calls for rebuilding the following streets: Canal, Dorrance street from the P. R. R. to Canal street, Swain street from Mifflin to its end, upper end of Farragut avenue where it swings to the north toward Taft street, Cedar street from Dorrance to Walnut street.

In addition to the above, about eight miles of other streets will be resurfaced.

A storm sewer will be constructed along Canal street, closing in what at one time was referred to as the "dye ditch." A storm sewer will be built

PRICE CONTROL

The administration is going to see what it can do about the law of supply and demand. It is encouraging higher wages. It is financing a farm products subsidy that will increase prices. It is loading taxes on industry. At the same time, it is diverting raw materials to war production, creating a shortage for non-defense purposes. The law of supply and demand will inevitably act to increase prices.

But the administration is compelled to make a show of putting this law on the shelf during the emergency. Labor leaders are demanding that real wages be protected, that is, wages in terms of buying power. John L. Lewis did say that coal prices should be raised to pass the miners' wage increase on to the public, but that is merely consistent with his view that the industry should be operated as a protected monopoly with power to make the public pay all that the traffic will bear. He made no statement on the effect of a coal price increase on the cost of living.

The administration should, of course, restrain all attempts to exploit the defense situation. Speculation should be discouraged. In order to make its efforts effective, it must have some power to control prices. But it can not encourage an increase in the cost of production without assuming responsibility for the inevitable increase in market prices.

It is promoting a general participation in the war business boom. It is failing to set an economy example by reducing nondefense Federal expenses. In the end it will have to deal with an ascending spiral of increasing prices unless it adopts a firmer policy with all elements affecting prices.

TURN IN GOLD TIDE

An financial observer sees a probability that under the operation of the Lease-Lend Law the tide of gold metal flowing into the United States will be turned and started to run the other way. He points out that this year in March the United States received only $118,500,000 in gold from abroad, compared to $459,000,000 in March, 1940.

The Lease-Lend Act began to apply to shipments out of the United States on March 11 last. Of course the country's exports for the month jumped as a consequence. So, also because of America's defense efforts, did imports, which were larger than in any March in four years.

Under the Lease-Lend Law the United States does not press for immediate payment for its goods as previously. Therefore Britain does not rush gold to these shores. But with imports rising and exceeding American exports to various countries supplying raw materials for American factories, Uncle Sam will pay out the difference between exports and imports in gold.

Financial experts hold that it is not improbable that part of the United States' huge stocks of the metal may be redistributed if the country's efforts to aid foreign nations combat aggression continue over a long period.

"THE GORGON'S MASK"

by Van Wyck Mason

CHAPTER TWENTY-TWO

Moody North strode back for a final inspection of the oily-smelling shack, and made a mental tally of the rim marks that certain great oil drums had left on the floor.

"Plenty of crude oil—well, let's be going, Bruce." He caught up one of the tarpon rods with which they had camouflaged the investigation.

Three minutes later the Walrus, that speedboat which Kilgour had chartered, was drawing a broad white streak across the bay heading for Kalohi Channel at forty knots.

From the speedboat's forward cockpit North cast a moody look back at the sun-gilded wharf. "Guess the bird's down for good," he commented. "It puzzles me to know why Karen's crowd started to pull out so early; at nine o'clock Teodora's body had just been found."

"Yes, I thought of that, too. Of course a wireless on Oahu would have done the trick. But I wouldn't worry too much about that just now."

"I'm not. I'm wondering just where Captain Karen moved all that fuel."

Kilgour blinked in the glare from the water. "So am I. Lord, if we only had time we could trace those oil purchases—"

He glanced quickly up into the aching blueness of the sky, for—low over the water and not a mile distant—a black-painted biplane was roaring along.

"I guess Karen pulled out as soon as word got 'round that sister Teodora had been keeping bad company," commented North.

"Bad company?" "Kanamura, of course." And North elapsed into silence while Kilgour gloomily surveyed the Walrus's American engineer and the hungry-looking half-caste boy who helped with the running of the speedboat.

How paradoxical it was, North mused, that on this lovely and peaceful sea the foulest of human emotions were abroad.

Somewhere out to the westward a Japanese cruiser squadron was steaming steadily towards Honolulu and terrible fate. . . .

Suddenly the U. S. agent noticed a black object floating less than a quarter of a mile to the left. Cupping his hands, he faced the stern and ordered the helm put over.

"Hello!" queried Kilgour. "What's up?"

Very soon it appeared that what North had seen was a human body in dark clothes floating far out from the nearest island.

Utterly vanished was the intelligence captain's previous lethargy as he ordered the Walrus's speed checked; soon he deftly caught the unknown's collar with a boat hook and ordered the Walrus into reverse.

The body proved to be quite unrecognizable. On closer inspection it appeared to be that of a Japanese, his head crushed by some terrific force, in such manner that the skin was not broken.

When the body had been hauled aboard, Kilgour stood looking on as North made the usual search.

"No papers at all," the searcher reported. "Queer, he's still warm, couldn't have been dead over fifteen minutes."

"Remember that plane?" Kilgour queried. "He might have fallen out of it. That would account for his battered condition."

North was intent on examination of an expensive gold wrist watch which had been worn by the dead Japanese.

later." North abruptly checked his remarks when he came upon one of those tags, such as tailors sew into custom-made suits, attached to the inner pocket of the dead man's coat. Printed on the tag were a number of Japanese characters, then in English, "A Noguchi, Kobe." On a dotted line the name "W. Ishi" had been filled in ink.

"I say, Hugh, he must have come from the plane," Kilgour presently insisted. "Don't you see? He must have."

"Why so sure?" "Eyesight, my lad. There's not been a boat anywhere near here, and the late Mr. Ishi certainly couldn't have drifted out from land and still be warm."

"Very true," North agreed briefly. "He couldn't. But, well, I'm going to catch forty winks before we fetch Honolulu—I've an idea we'll have a busy time tonight."

During the remainder of the long trip back to Honolulu, both the intelligence men slumped down in the forward cockpit and seemed to doze off to sleep. . . .

In his doze, North could see nothing save Nadia Stefan's exquisite features; quite effectively the arching brows, the red appeal of lips, and the play of lights in her eyes banished all other thoughts. . . .

W. Ishi had been a man of importance in the Japanese colony of Honolulu. Reporters flocked to the quarantine dock like flies, and North found it significant that these newsgatherers were not only from the Chinese and Japanese dailies, but from Honolulu's leading white papers as well. And soon outside the musty-smelling boat shed in which Mr. Ishi's body had been laid out, Hideyo Kanamura appeared upon the scene.

Kanamura did not immediately notice Captain North who had effaced himself behind the capable bulk of a big Hawaiian policeman. The intelligence officer's hand closed over Kilgour's wrist when Kanamura came to a halt beside the dead man. Looking very spruce in his white linen suit, the Japanese peered down at his compatriot a long minute, then drew himself up and joined his heels with a click.

Kanamura's sharply delineated features had suddenly become carved of wood. His hand crept out, almost timidly, and touched the chilled fingers dangling at an impossible angle over the edge of the canvas stretcher.

While Kanamura murmured something in his native language, the four or five other Japanese present turned their heads away and gazed at the floor. Then, like a man who determines not to be daunted by a personal loss, the ship chandler faced the police inspector.

"Who found him, please? When, where, and how?"

The police inspector indicated North and Kilgour. "It was these gentlemen, Mr. Kanamura. They found the body floating off the island of Maui, about three hours ago."

A deadly glitter shone in Kanamura's bright black eyes as he declared, "You! So it was you?"

"Yes," the intelligence captain said, calmly ignoring the deeper implication of the question. "We were sorry it was too late to do anything for him."

Inscrutable, yet unspcakably menacing, was the look Kanamura shot at the white-clad American; two or three of the Japanese in the background murmured among themselves.

"I am sure," the ship chandler went on in a choked and quivering voice, "that you did everything you could."

His double meaning was so obvious that the English agent said, "Please be reasonable; he was like that when we found him—quite dead, you know."

"Well, genie, guess that'll be all for now," the police inspector announced after shutting his notebook with a snap. "May have to call you for an inquest."

"We'll be glad to do anything we can," North assured him. Ignoring Kanamura's baleful glare, he stalked out of the shed, hailed a cab, and drove off with Kilgour who asked, "I say, Hugh, where are we heading?"

"To a watchmaker," North replied as the cab threaded its way through milling traffic. "You see, I'm curious to find out exactly how long it takes this watch," he protracted, "to stop when immersed in water."

Half an hour later the watchmaker had repaired Mr. Ishi's watch. Shortly after that, in the wicker armchairs of North's room, both intelligence men were relaxing momentarily. Finally Kilgour suggested, "Well, Hugh, my lad, I shouldn't wonder but it's time for a summing up, as a barrister would say."

"Sure thing," North agreed with a long sigh. "At last we've got something definite to go on—now we know how Teodora Mazro died."

Bruce Kilgour straightened his body to stare curiously at his companion. "And just how do you think she died?"

"A needle thrust."

"Hum—you found that out at the morgue?"

"The proof, yes; but I guessed it on Abner Polk's float."

"So far so good," the Englishman murmured, "and now will you tell me how the body came to be where it was found?"

"Please think back," North invited. "You recall there was no boat in sight before Teodora's body was found?"

"She might have gone swimming," Kilgour objected.

North made impatient sounds. "Good lord, Bruce, are you going to suggest that someone swam up and drove a needle into her medulla nerve center?"

"I didn't mean that," snapped the Englishman, coloring a little. "I meant she might have gone swimming with someone who murdered her on the beach, stripped her to prevent identification, and towed her out to sea just as Clark brought her in to the float."

Judiciously, North pursed his lips. "Possible, but hardly probable."

"I told you that," Kilgour reminded, "but—what are you going to do now? Are you mad?"

His eyes followed North who had brought forth Mr. Ishi's watch and held it over a glass of water.

"Possibly," North admitted. "But please look at my watch and don't take your eyes from it. When I say 'now,' note the time carefully and again when I say 'stop.'"

When the watch showed six o'clock sharp, the intelligence captain signalled "Now!" and swiftly lowered the wrist into the tubular holding the glass up to the light to watch that tiny minute hand ticking around.

"It's slowing," North announced at the end of several tense and apparently endless minutes. "Careful!"

Inside the glass the wrist watch's minute hand faltered—stopped and North called, "Stop!"

"Eight minutes, twenty-two seconds past six o'clock," came Kilgour's prompt announcement.

"Thank you," the intelligence captain fished the watch from its watery position. "Guess our late lamented Jap friend couldn't possibly have fallen from the airplane we saw. That plane went by at least twenty minutes before we even sighted the body; Ishi's watch had only stopped ten minutes before we hauled him into the boat."

"Neat!" was the Englishman's admiring comment. "Uncommonly neat! Point proved!"

FASHION PARADE

By Max Factor, Jr.
(Famous Hollywood Make-Up Specialist Writing For I. N. S.)

HOLLYWOOD—(INS)—Have you ever contemplated the fact that there is an "etiquette" to the art of make-up?

There actually is such a grooming code of conduct. It is not one which has been arbitrarily formulated by any one make-up authority, or combined group of authorities. Like true etiquette in any field of activity, the etiquette of make-up has evolved itself. It represents practical conclusions to problems which arose as the art of make-up developed.

Among these rules of make-up etiquette is one which suggests: "Don't let a man see you apply your make-up."

The secret of your appearance glamour should remain your own. It is not very sensible to vigorously call your husband's attention to the fact that you regularly accentuate the most perfect of your features, and minimize or conceal some which are not so perfect.

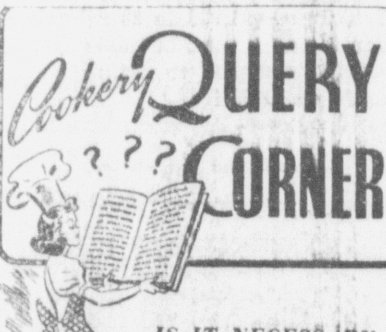

Another of our make-up etiquette rules declares that women shouldn't apply their make-up at the dining table.

This rule which really shouldn't have to be brought to anyone's attention, but the fact still remains that there is frequent need for its being mentioned.

Too many women DO interrupt their dining with make-up repairs. It is in very poor taste to go through the mechanics of applying make-up at the table. Also, it is a de-glamorizing operation, as far as your dinner companions are concerned. A cloud of face powder never improved the appearance or flavor of any fish or steak course.

If you can possibly avoid it, don't apply or repair make-up while on the street.

This simply involves that sometimes

IS IT NECESSARY TO SEAR A ROAST?

No, it's just extra work. Searing doesn't "keep in the juices" as we once believed. In fact there are more cooking losses when meat is seared than when it is not. A moderately low temperature for the entire cooking period gives a roast that is uniformly done, juicy, plump and full, with no charred bones or fat. So why bother to sear?

HOW DO YOU MAKE GOOD GRAVY?

You don't need a sieve to avoid lumpy gravy. There'll be no lumps if you add cold liquid rather than hot and stir constantly from the time you start to brown the flour and fat. Brown the flour and fat as much as desired before adding the liquid as it will not brown further after the liquid is added.

intangible quantity known as "good taste." You wouldn't emerge from your house with your shoes under your arm, and then sit down on the sidewalk to put them on. Following the same line of conservative reasoning, don't apply your lipstick or powder as you gaze at your reflection in a window on a public street.

Don't borrow make-up.

There is nothing intangible about the import of this rule. Borrowing make-up is in very poor taste. It is altogether unsanitary. And more often than not it is rather useless from a glamour-furthering standpoint.

The Great Game of Politics

and approved by Mr. Roosevelt before delivery, leave no doubt that this is the course he wants to follow. For many weeks now the pressure upon him to move in that direction has been very great.

HIS real difficulty, of course, is to find a way to get around his own ill-advised utterances, made in the heat of a political campaign—and unnecessarily repeated since—without seeming to justify the charges of his Republican and isolationist opponents that he deliberately deceived the people—first, in order to secure his reelection and, second, in order to secure passage of the lend-lease bill.

AMONG the things now being cited against him, and to which he will have to find some answer, are: First, his whole hearted acceptance of the near-isolationist plank in the Democratic platform, written by Senator Wheeler; second, his campaign speeches in which he assured the people that the United States under his leadership would not fight in a foreign war, unless attacked; third, his press conference characterization of the conveying suggestion as "absurd," his insistence that conveying means "shooting" and shooting means war.

It is not easy to swallow such statements, still retain the confidence of the country and not play into the hands of his enemies. Mr. Roosevelt did not have to put himself in this untenable position. He undoubtedly regrets it and his embarrassments are obvious. But there is a way out, and so far as anyone can see, one way only.

That way is to be, for once, wholly honest with the people. Tell them all the facts, admit mistakes, give them for once an undiluted dose of the truth, and then offer them the kind of leadership for which the crisis calls. They are entitled to that and the chances are that they would overwhelmingly respond.

IF they do not, then it is better for the President and for all of us to know what kind of country this is, anyhow. In any event, there is no other way out of the President's self-contrived predicament except for him to tell the full truth. The forecasts indicate he has made up his mind to do so, but one cannot be certain about that until after he has spoken.

FINAL SCORE IS 4 TO 4

Both Teams Played Good Ball
Afield, Making Only
Three Errors

Joe Diamanti's Diamond team played another deadlock game last evening as his team and the St. Ann's A. A. baseballers battled to a 4-4 tie on the latter's field, Garden street and Jefferson avenue.

But the combination did good work after the first inning when St. Ann's counted its quartet of runs on five hits and an error. From then on the Wood street club was blanked with four hits, never threatening again.

In the meantime, the Diamond players kept pecking away at Paul Cervellero, the Saints' hurler, and finally scored a pair of markers in the fourth, thanks to a double by Seibold. In the following canto, it was another extra-base hit by the same player which scored the tally which tied the game.

Both teams played good ball afield, three errors being charged against the clubs. Bert Avella pulled the fielding gem of the evening in the fifth when he raced into deep center-field to nab Abute's long bid for a hit with the sacks populated with Diamond boys. Two runs had already crossed the plate when Avella made his catch.

BADENHAUSEN NINE LOSES TO VOLTZ-TEXACO

EDDINGTON, May 13.—With Hal Shackleton in mid-season form, the Voltz-Texaco nine power-housed the Badenhause team into a 10-2 defeat last evening on the Turner's diamond.

Shackleton limited the boiler-makers to four hits and did his best work in the final inning when with the bags loaded he struck out pinch-hitter Whyte and got out Murphy on a grounder.

Harry Goodwin did the hurling for the losers and deserved a better fate. His mates committed seven errors behind his pitching and many of the gasoliers' runs were made when two players were out.

Manager "Jimmy" Cooper of the winners provided the best base-knock of the evening when he tripped in the sixth with the bags filled with Voltz players.

It was the first win of the season for the Devils and the second straight loss for Badenhause.

BRAGG'S OUT-DROP TOO MUCH FOR EDGELY

EDGELY, May 13.—That out-drop of "Loggie" proved to be the undoing of the Edgely A. A. last evening on the latter's home field as the Auto Boys downed the Edgelyites, 6-2, in a well-played tilt.

Bragg struck out ten batters and limited the losers to four hits. The colored boy had but one hit in the fourth, when Edgely scored its pair of markers. But he pulled out of this by fanning the Doster brothers and whiffing the side in the fifth.

Four markers in the fourth gave the Morgannens the triumph and spoiled a nice pitching exhibition by Ralph Linck. Linck was going strong and had held the Auto Boys to three hits when Danny Mulhern plastered him for a long double which was the turning point of the tilt.

"Joie" Heftman had two out of three to lead the batters of the evening. Leigh caught a nice game for the losing squad, it being their first defeat of the season.

May Defer All Men Over 30 From Draft

Washington, May 13.—An executive order deferring all men over 30 from the draft was anticipated in official quarters today if Congress approves the deferment amendment to the Selective Service Act proposed by Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, draft director.

The proposed amendment would give President Roosevelt authority to issue new regulations ordering blanket deferment of men by age groups. While nothing was said formally about what ages would be exempted under the provision, spokesmen at draft headquarters said that they expected an order to defer all those over 30 "or possibly younger."

Meanwhile, Rep. May, D. Ky., Chairman of the House Military Affairs Committee, to which Gen. Hershey's proposal was referred, announced that "we will take our time about considering it."

Stabs Stepfather
Pittsburgh, May 13.—Avis Marie Feller, 17-year old Schenley high school student, today stabbed to death the man who married her mother after she was divorced from her father, police said.

The girl, who was to graduate next month, told police she wielded a five inch kitchen knife to stop her stepfather from mistreating her mother. The new husband was William E. Burton, 46, an automobile salesman.

Ship Requisition Starts Controversy

Washington, May 13.—The Senate headed into a violent controversy today over the Administration's bill authorizing requisition of all foreign ships in U. S. harbors as Senatorial foes charged that the measure goes beyond the lease lend law policy and embraces a potential act of war.

Sen. Bailey, D. N. C., Chairman of the Commerce Committee, which approved the bill by a 11 to 4 vote, plans to formally report the legislation to the Senate today. He hopes to call it up tomorrow.

the death sentence and compared Frisbie's case with that of Mrs. Tillie Ireland, who killed her illegitimate son and then dismembered his body. Mrs. Ireland, a Philadelphian, was condemned to death but her sentence later was commuted to life imprisonment by the high tribunal. Frisbie, the attorney stated, was entitled to similar clemency.

While hitchhiking, Frisbie was picked up by Lee, and three days later the latter's bullet-riddled body was found partly submerged in Elk Creek, Sullivan County. Frisbie was arrested ten days after the killing and admitted the crime to police.

The defendant told officers that he was destitute at the time of the crime and needed money to provide food for his wife and two stepsons. Frisbie added that he was attempting to get Lee's automobile for a planned robbery when the victim put up a fight. After the shooting, he rifled the dead man's pockets, threw the body out of the car and drove off.

Locals' Win Eliminates Two-
Way Loop Tie and Aids
Bensalem

By Jack Gill

Bristol High School eliminated a two way tie in the Lower Bucks baseball circuit yesterday when they gained sweet revenge over Newtown for a beating handed them earlier in the season. With "Dutch" Vandegrift hurling a steady five hit brand of ball, the Cards had an easy time defeating Newtown, 10-3.

Up until yesterday's contest, Bensalem and Newtown were knotted for the lead. Both had tasted defeat but once. But Bristol, fast rounding into form after a slow start, pounded Keyser for nine hits and ten markers.

The Indians took a one run lead in the fourth when Harrison reached first on Barouth's error and went to second on a wild pitch. He later scored on Frehafer's safe rap.

Bristol batted around in a rather weird inning in their half of the fourth. Only Tazik and Barouth had safe hits. But six runs trickled across the plate. Three errors, one walk, a balk, a hit batsman and some otherwise errors of omission and commission aided the homesters cause no little.

Opportune hits by Tazik, Yates, Hopkins and Accardi combined with another Keyser balk and an error by Harrison saw Bristol tally three more in the fifth and assume a 9 to 1 lead. From then on Vandegrift had little holding the advantage.

Accordingly, Boccardo and Tazik led the homesters at bat, while Vandegrift's mound work was sparkling. Only Frehafer could solve his slants for more than one safety.

INTERESTING HOME LIFE

WACO, Tex.—(INS)—Living with a proverbially absent-minded professor is not enough for Mrs. Leo T. Murray and her pretty co-ed daughter, Ellen. They have snakes and a gila monster on the place. Dr. Murray, curator of the Strecker Museum at Baylor University keeps live specimens at home where he can care for them. His collection to date includes nine copperheads, one rare rattlesnake and the gila monster.

Strang handled personally, a 75-year-old jig designer, retired for many years, went back to work at his trade. This man, however, is not employed at the Fleetwing plant.

"This man," said Strang, "wrote me a letter stating his qualifications, saying that he hadn't worked at the trade for some 15 years, but that in the present emergency he felt it was his duty to offer himself if he could be used. Well, he was used all right and is doing a good job, too."

This, Strang said, showed there wasn't any prejudice today against the "over 40" worker who knows his job.

Skilled worker shortage began two years ago, says Strang.

"There was plenty of evidence in 1939 that we were going to run into the present situation," he said.

"As a personnel manager I observed a shortage of first-class skilled men two years ago and heard it discussed among other personnel men.

"It was as plain as anything can be that when men had been laid off for years in their trades, when apprentices hadn't been trained, when plants had been operating with a minimum of workers, any expansion, certainly a sudden expansion, would find skilled workers at a premium.

"And now the time has come and there's no use being surprised at the situation. Even now it isn't easy to meet some aspects of the problem."

Strang illustrated this by citing the immediate labor situation at the Fleetwings plant.

Tool designers, jig designers and jig makers are needed there, he said, but at the moment the company is well supplied with other classes of labor.

As to machinists, he said: "We're going to need more than we've got, but for the moment we have enough. What we'd like to have is a reservoir of first-class, well-trained machinists. Getting them when I do need them is probably going to be a problem."
